

7.2 Opportunities and challenges of urbanisation

'State' questions typically require concise and direct responses. Some students respond instead with lengthy explanations or descriptions. For 'state' questions, long descriptions or explanations do not make a stronger answer. Look at the following questions to see if you can effectively answer 'state' questions.

- ~~1~~ State two opportunities of urban living for residents in cities. [2]
- ~~2~~ State three environmental challenges faced by cities due to rapid urban growth. [3]
- ~~3~~ State one example of a social challenge caused by urbanisation in LICs. [1]
- ~~4~~ State one push factor that drives people to leave rural areas for towns and cities. [1]

REFLECTION

Do you recognise the difference between 'state' questions and other question types? Looking at Questions 1–4, you can see how 'state' prompts you to identify and recall specific information rather than describe or explain a concept. In this context, 'state' means to give straightforward answers without explanation or justification. Reflecting on this can help you become more precise in your responses.

How would the answers for Questions 1–4 look different if the command word was 'describe' rather than 'state'? Switching command words in this way can help to reinforce your understanding of the type of information required and improve your ability to differentiate between types of questions.
